Ceiling hung sound absorbing screen

PanelHush Acoustic ceiling hung panels are a PET (Polyethylene terephthalate) materials and acoustic panels are effective in reducing room echo and reverberation by absorbing sound waves that bounce off hard surfaces such as walls, floors, and ceilings.

PET materials are often used as a core material in acoustic panels because they are lightweight and have good acoustic properties. PET materials are made from recycled plastic bottles, making them an eco-friendly option for acoustic treatment.

Acoustic panels work by absorbing sound waves that hit their surface. When sound waves hit a hard surface, they bounce back and forth, creating an echo and increasing reverberation in the room. This can make it difficult to hear speech clearly and can create an unpleasant listening environment. When acoustic panels are installed, the sound waves hit the panels and are absorbed, reducing the amount of sound that bounces back and reducing the amount of echo and reverberation in the room.
